Google+ spilling private data - who next?

Google+ was potentially spilling users private data upto March this year when it was secretly fixed, according to TheRegister:

https://www.theregister.co.uk/2018/10/16/alphabet_lawsuit_security_google_plus/

After having failed with their own attempt at a facebook-simile Google now announce they will be opening a business side to Google+, see:

Anyone else want to waste time creating another online profile on yet another social site promising great things?

No, me Neither.

And finally... Whos next? Cathay Pacific, reported 25th October 2018:

https://www.theregister.co.uk/2018/10/25/cathay_pacific_hacked_up_to_94_million_passenger_deets_exposed/

And BA:

Why would they target airlines? It exposes: DOB, passport number, dates of holidays, and much more valid reliable data! Fasten your seat belts please we are in for some long term turbulence.

When is a burglar favoured over your pet cat?

When is a burglar favoured over your pet cat? When its about to be run-over!

This is not a joke, and a dilemma for the future of AI in driver-less vehicles:
